

James (Jim) M. Wagstaffe is an attorney and professor from San Francisco. His law practice focuses on litigation of high stakes cases, including recent defamation, whistleblower and personal injury trials.

He has argued numerous high-profile appeals including the successful California Supreme Court case allowing an undocumented immigrant to obtain his law license. Recently, Chief Justice John Roberts re-appointed him as the Chair of the Federal Judicial Center Foundation. As a teacher for almost forty years, he is an Adjunct Professor teaching Civil Procedure at Hastings College of the Law, as well as Public Speaking at Stanford University and Media Law at San Francisco State University.

In the last few years, Professor Wagstaffe has been chosen twice as Teacher of the Year at Hastings and won the coveted Judge John R. Brown Award for the best teacher of federal judges in the nation. His publications include the best-selling Lexis Nexis Practice Guide: Federal Civil Procedure Before Trial (Lexis Nexis 2020) and Romancing the Room (Random House 2002).
